Malta and the Dolomites 'meet'

The Accademia della Cucina Italiana continues in its endeavours to bring Italian culture, including that of food and drink, to Malta. One of its most recent activities was at the Istituto Italiano della Cultura where members of the Accademia from the Trentino-Alto Adige region presented Dolasila a multi-media production of the 'ladina' traditions. This evening of music, legend, art and gastronomy was open to the public. H.E. The Italian ambassador to Malta as well as the Minister of Culture and Justice, Dr Owen Bonnici, were present for this interesting evening.

Dolasila is the name of the warring princess and principal female legendary figure of the region. Dott. Roland Verra, writer, poet and above all an expert of the region introduced the audience to the legends and other important aspects of this beautiful part of Italy. The soprano Susy Rottonara, who is also a pianist and composer sang about Princess Dolasila while in the background photographs, lyrics of the songs and musical poems were projected.

Marina Crazzolaro and her husband Luca, representing hoteliers of the Alto Adige spoke about the ties between land, food and lifestyle. They produce cheeses from milk from their own farm, one cheese is called, what else, if not Dolasila.

The evening ended with an elegant buffet so generously offered by the hosts when those present were able to taste cheeses, salami, bread and wines from the region. Truly an evening of culture in all its aspects.

On another evening there was a superb meal at the San Giuliano restaurant in St Julian's which was 'assessed' by members of the Accademia.

Marino Paolucci, Ramiro Cali Corleo, Hadar de Vito, Ambassador De Vito, Dr Salvatore Schirmo, Davide Anecchini, Tristano Mancini and Mark Vassallo. (Second row): Mario Mezzadri, Roland Verra, Susy Rottonara, M. Tomaselli, Egle Liotta and Marina Crazzolaro.
